With concerns about under-performing pensions at the forefront of people's minds, the SIPP Zone is a place for investors who are more open to the idea of taking control of their pensions.

According to Geoffrey Pointon, Chairman of Pointon York SIPP Solutions. "The number of self-invested personal pensions (SIPPs) completed each year is growing by around 15 per cent and will increase rapidly over the next few years as people understand the huge financial advantages to these vehicles." Mr Pointon continues, "Less than a decade ago, it was widely thought that SIPPs would number around 400,000, current thinking today is that figure could burgeon to around four million."

"As market conditions fluctuate, so does the awareness and popularity of different types of investment, but at the end of the day, real assets hold their value. In the current economic climate investors prefer to have an asset which is tangible. While property SIPPs can be more complex; what it comes down to is simple arithmetic and when you get the financial engineering right, property delivers," he concludes.
